

Why is this a problem?

The lack of easy access to this information can hurt students' ability to take full advantage of their time at college and at worst can cause people to graduate late.

Why do the current solutions not fully address the problem?

Guidance counselors generally focus only on planning specific classes one semester at a time and tools the university provides to plan your major like DegreeWorks and Major Maps each only include part of the full context needed. To get the full picture students would have to look at information from many different services and compile it in a spreadsheet or document themselves, which many do not do because of how much effort it requires.

Why has this not been fixed already?

The university has improved this, but has not invested the resources to make it a truly good experience
